The Convergence of Interaction Design and Architecture. September 27, 2017 /. James Patten. The rapid development of Internet of Things (IoT) technologies is propelling us toward a world where an ever-increasing amount of our experiences are mediated by digital interactivity. As this trend continues, the task of designing our built environment will be as much about designing the interactive experiences that happen in that space as it will be about form, program, materiality and so on.

These characteristics could lead to similar constraints of chromosomal architecture. The interaction decay exponent determined in this study (-0.73) is close to that described earlier for Drosophila (-0.85). Interestingly, the interaction decay exponent in human nuclei is lower (-1.08), implying higher local compaction.
